

HISTORY OF THE ACE PROGRAM

In the early 1990's Dan Bump went from working 50 hours per week making $35,000 per year to $105,000 per year for a 20 hour work week. Adjusting for inflation that equates to $215,500.00 annually in today's dollars.

This was done by going through this same type of training and changing his role from the surgical tech role to the role of the surgical assistant.

In the 90's the only way to get the type of training to qualify you for the role of the assistant was to have a surgeon take you on as their apprentice or go to a full time college program similar to medical school.

In 1995 Dan decided to create a program for the masses. One that could, for the most part be completed from your home computer, with the exception of 6 days in the classroom for hands on training.

There was born the very first distance learning surgical assisting program.

Today students from all over the country use the ACE Program as a platform to advance their career in the OR.

Dan has helped thousands of people over the last 19 years reach their goal of becoming a surgical assistant, and he can help you reach yours as well.
